

KSOL Voted Best Business 2007

The KSOL Team including John Lewis who won awards for the best business 2007

KEY Stages Online Ltd (KSOL), have won the prestigious award of Best Small Business 2007.

The award was presented to the directors Aron and Anita Dhunna at a gala night where participants including John Lewis, N-Power and HSBC were competing.

Key Stages Online faced stiff competition, but the company won on its ability to provide children's education using pioneering technology.

KSOL's delivery of teaching material, methods and the success enjoyed by children were hard to compete with. In the end the judges commented on how innovative and inspiring their teaching methods were.

The awards were presented on Friday 5th October 2007, by the Managing Director of John Lewis and radio presenter Phil Upton. The event was sponsored by John Lewis and Solihull Times Part of the Trinity Group and AWM.

KSOL has pioneered a method of providing e-learning and face to face education for its users. KSOL is passionate about education and believes that every child has something to offer. In the short time that KSOL has been running its structured approach to education has helped children build confidence with their Maths, English and mental agility throughout the UK.
